What is the Guaranteed Income Pilot Project?

A San Diego for Every Child is piloting a guaranteed income project as an economic justice tool to help address the racial and gender inequities that impact the lives of children experiencing poverty.

With COVID-19, social unrest, and an emerging recession, guaranteed income is an ideal program to address the experience of child poverty both in the current moment and beyond.

San Diego for Every Child is committed to cultivating a deeper understanding around the root causes of child poverty by illuminating the systems-level changes needed to create a San Diego that works for every child.

How Are Families Spending Their Guaranteed Income?

In the first THREE months, families have received a total of $225,000 in 450 guaranteed income payments!

Some families chose all or mostly cash transactions, and some families chose all or mostly debit transactions.

For debit transactions, families spent the most on food.

How are Community Voices driving the Pilot Project?

San Diego for Every Child is facilitating a Narrative Change Cohort to interview participants and provide them with resources to share their experiences and outcomes of guaranteed income with press, elected officials, and the community at large.

What is next for the Guaranteed Income Pilot?

A community advisory board will be consulted to support and guide the release of outcome data as well as ongoing community engagement. Research and evaluation is being conducted by the Center for Guaranteed Income Research at University of Pennsylvania. Stakeholders will be provided a final report of the pilot 12 months after the final disbursement is provided. Additionally, stakeholders will be provided an online dashboard updated quarterly showing demographic and spending data of program participants.
